Evaluation activity of a project of "social cohesion" carried out experimentally in four districts of the suburbs of Milan in the three-year period 2010-13, by a network of social cooperatives belonging to the SIS Consortium and with the financing of the Cariplo Foundation.

The evaluation was developed taking up the original design hypotheses and through the preparation and management of meetings, the realization of research activities and the production of synthesis materials related to interviews, questionnaires and focus groups. The work was organized in two phases.

The first phase - restricted to the promoter group and the main project partner (Municipality of Milan) - served to support the strategic reflection of the same: verification and sharing of the learning and innovation elements generated by the project compared to the traditional intervention methods; analysis of assessment tools already available and used at national and international level and construction of an ad hoc model for the Punto e Linea project; extended comparison with the project operators and partners for the sharing of strategic considerations and the evaluation tool.

The second phase saw the broadening of the scope of action to include the point of view of the beneficiaries, of the territorial partners and of the potential strategic partners for future initiatives. The path ended with a publication and the organization of a public moment of presentation of results and comparison with the city.
